Happy Christmas

The authorship of "A Visit from Saint Nicholas" has been under debate for centuries. Clement Clark Moore is given credit for writing this famous poem, although it was first published anonymously. Henry Livingston Jr. is the other supposed author of the poem. One of the major points of the Livingston supporters is personality. Henery Livingston Jr. was the happy, jolly type, who was known to say "Happy Christmas" around the holiday season. Moore on the other hand was rather mean and not particularly. A member of their elite Knickerbocker Club, it is thought that Moore would never say "Happy Christmas". This is a common phrase, and Moore wouldn't say this because it might associate him with the lower classes. This is one of the major arguments of the Henry Livingston supporters.
